This documentation and the associated programs (both hereinafter referred to as “software”) are protected by copyright.

We are happy to receive information about incorrect or outdated content via info@avm.de.

The software is provided exclusively in machine-readable form (object code format). AVM grants the Licensee the non-exclusive right to use the software. The right of use is limited to the agreed period; in the absence of such an agreement, the right of use is unlimited in time. The Licensee may only make one copy of the software, which may only be used for backup purposes (backup copy). The Licensee is not entitled to modify, reverse engineer, disassemble, translate, or extract parts of the software except in the cases permitted by law (in particular in accordance with § 69e of the German Copyright Act, Decompilation). AVM reserves all rights not expressly granted. The Licensee may not remove alphanumeric and other identifiers from the data carriers and must transfer them unchanged to each backup copy. The information provided herewith may only be passed on to third parties with the written consent of AVM.

The Licensee to whom the software is not provided for the purpose of commercial resale (end customer) may only transfer the right of use to third parties together with the product that he has acquired together with the software from AVM. In the event of a transfer of the right of use to a third party, the Licensee must ensure that the third party is not granted any further rights than AVM is entitled to under these provisions and that the third party is at least subject to the obligations arising from these provisions with regard to the software. In this case, the Licensee may not retain any copies of the Software. The Licensee is not entitled to grant sublicenses. If the Licensee makes the Software available to a third party, the Licensee shall be responsible for compliance with any export requirements and shall indemnify AVM against any obligations in this respect.

Insofar as AVM provides software for which AVM only has a derived right of use (third-party software), the terms of use agreed for the third-party software shall apply in addition to and take precedence over these provisions. Licensee may distribute any Third Party Software from Texas Instruments (“TI Software”) provided with this Software in object code format only on the condition that Licensee limits the use of the TI Software by way of a written license agreement to the AVM product that Licensee has acquired together with the AVM Software, and that (except as permitted by law) duplication, reverse engineering, decompilation, or disassembly of the TI Software is prohibited. If and to the extent that open source software is provided, the terms of use to which the open source software is subject shall apply in addition to and take precedence over these provisions. Upon request, AVM shall provide the source code of relevant open source software if the terms of use of such open source software provide for the release of the source code. AVM shall make reference in the contract documents to the existence and terms of use of any third-party software or open source software provided and shall make the relevant terms of use available upon request.

Preamble

The licenses for most software are designed to take away your freedom to share and change it. By contrast, the GNU General Public License is intended to guarantee your freedom to share and change free software--to make sure the software is free for all its users.

This license, the Lesser General Public License, applies to some specially designated software packages -- typically libraries -- of the Free Software Foundation and other authors who decide to use it. You can use it too but we suggest you first think carefully about whether this license or the ordinary General Public License is the better strategy to use in any particular case, based on the explanations below.

When we speak of free software, we are referring to freedom of use, not price. Our General Public Licenses are designed to make sure that you have the freedom to distribute copies of free software (and charge for this service if you wish); that you receive source code or can get it if you want it; that you can change the software or use pieces of it in new free programs; and that you are informed that you can do these things.

To protect your rights, we need to make restrictions that forbid distributors to deny you these rights or to ask you to surrender the rights. These restrictions translate to certain responsibilities for you if you distribute copies of the software, or if you modify it.

For example, if you distribute copies of such a program, whether gratis or for a fee, you must give the recipients all the rights that we gave you. You must make sure that they, too, receive or can get the source code. If you link other code with the library, you must provide complete object files to the recipients, so that they can relink them with the library after making changes to the library and recompiling it. And you must show them these terms so they know their rights.
